Worldwide television transmissions via satellite, commonplace now but virtually unknown seven years ago, continued to increase in volume and in frequency during 1971.

Many national news programs in the U.S. routinely include segments of international events transmitted in color via the global commercial satellite system.

During 1971, broadcasters used a total of 3,562 half-channel hours of satellite time system-wide, an increase of 46% over the previous year, and the 7th straight year of greater volume. The number or frequency of TV program transmissions via satellite has grown from 5 a month to approximately 250 a month—an increase of about 50 times in the last seven years.

The ability of TV cameras to cover major events almost any place in the world "live via satellite" continued to be reflected in steadily increasing satellite usage figures into the early months of 1972. Events in Asia dominated the world news during February. Broadcasters in the U.S. and Europe made heavy use of the satellite system for TV coverage of the Winter Olympics from Sapporo, Japan, from February 3 through February 13. During the latter part of February, broadcasters used many hours of satellite time to chronicle in color President Nixon's eight-day journey through three cities in the People's Republic of China. The events pushed the total satellite usage time for the month of February to 753 half-channel hours, a record amount of usage up to that point for telecasts via satellite in a single month.

Satellite telecasts of the Games from Sapporo accounted for more than 4 times the amount of satellite time used during the previous Winter Olympics held at Grenoble, France, in 1968. The satellite link for the President's trip represented the first real communications bridge between the U.S. and the People's Republic of China in nearly 23 years.

The 13-day trip by President Nixon to the Soviet Union and 3 other countries in May, the Summer Olympics in Munich, the U.S. political conventions and national election, the Apollo program and other events promised to make 1972 an active year for international TV programming via satellite.

Highlights of 1971

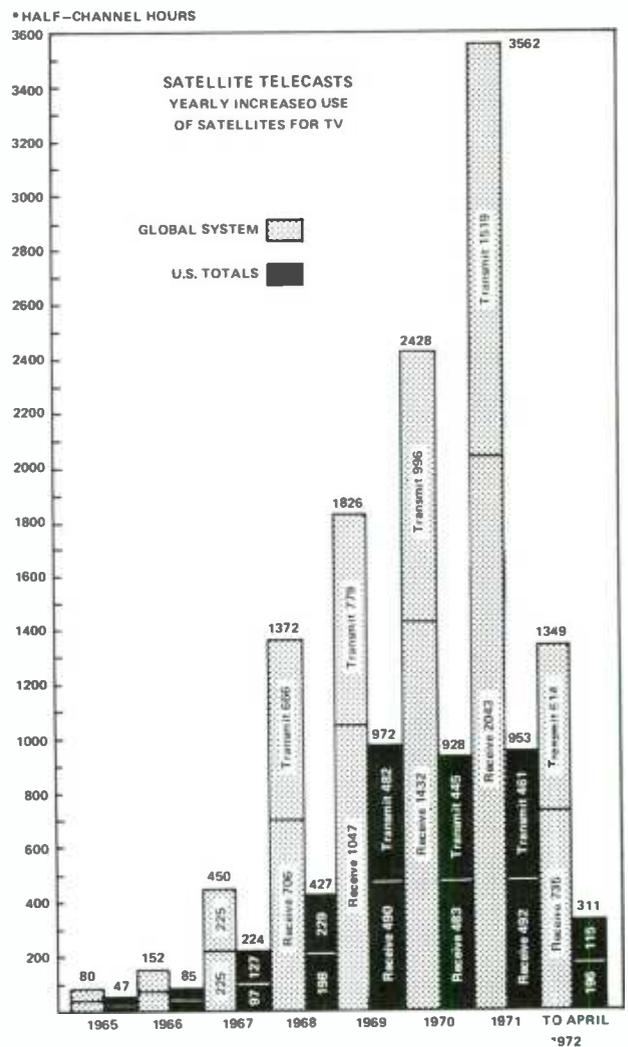

One of the highlights of satellite TV during 1971 was live coverage of the 2500th anniversary celebration of the Persian Empire at Persepolis, Iran, in October. This extravaganza was seen by viewers in more than 50 countries. The special ITU centennial Children of the World program in June represented a technical achievement in that 6 TV channels were used employing 4 satellites and 17 different earth stations around the world to bring the one-hour program to 45 different countries.

Other notable TV transmissions of the year included:

The Apollo 14 and 15 missions, visit of Premier Colombo of Italy to the U.S., Los Angeles earthquake, Hawaiian Open Golf Tournament, World Figure Skating Championships, Pope Paul's Easter Mass and traditional Easter Blessings, President Nixon's speech on Vietnam, Academy Awards and Emmy Awards ceremonies, Kentucky Derby and Preakness horse races, World Series, signing of U.S.-Japan Agreement on Okinawa, bull fights from Spain, Wimbledon Tennis matches from England, Miss Universe Contest.

Multipoint TV and Daily Telecasts

Broadcasters continued to make increased use of multi-destination TV transmissions, taking full advantage of the unique capabilities of communications satellites to disseminate a program to many points at the same time. More than 2 of every 3 telecasts via satellite during 1971 were received simultaneously by 2 or more earth stations. Such multi-destination transmissions accounted for about 65% of the total amount of half-channel hours of TV time system-wide around the world. (See Comsat chart).

* A half-channel is the link between one earth station and one satellite. A one-hour program, for example, from the U.S. to receiving stations in England and five Latin American countries would total seven half-channel hours (the sum of one transmit half-channel and six receive half-channel hours).

Comsat

Until recently, satellite usage by broadcasters reflected largely the unpredictable occurrence of events of international news interest. For both U.S. and overseas networks, one of the next major increases in satellite usage may come with packaged or syndicated news and feature program materials transmitted by satellite on a regularly scheduled basis.

System Growth

Although a number of factors affect the use of satellites for TV, perhaps the most significant is the growth in the capacity and flexibility of the system itself.

Three of the large new Intelsat IV series satellites were in full-time commercial operation by Feb. 1972, two in service over the Atlantic and one over the Pacific Ocean. Another was scheduled for launch and emplacement over the Indian Ocean to complete the transition of the global system to one of all-new Intelsat IV satellites. Each one of these fourth-generation commercial satellites has a capacity for an average of about 5,000 voice-grade circuits and a color TV channel—more than 25 times the capacity of the first commercial satellite, Early Bird, launched in 1965.

The new IV's, equipped with steerable spot beams, greatly expand the communications capability and reliability of the global system.

The network of earth stations in the system—the essential ground links—also is expanding. Twelve new earth station antennas went into commercial operation in 1971; five more station antennas joined the system in early 1972. As of June 1, 1972, a total of 68 earth station antennas were in commercial service around the world, making possible direct satellite communications service to every continent, including Antarctica.

New earth stations open new areas of the world to communications via satellite and, in turn, bring increasing demands for TV.

The Global System

Commercial satellites represent the latest advance in communications technology. The present global system, composed of satellites and a network of earth stations, is capable of handling all types of commercial communications—telephony, data, telegraph, facsimile and both color and black-and-white television.

Each Intelsat satellite is stationed in a synchronous orbit 22,300 miles above the equator where it can "see" an area embracing nearly one-third of the earth. Each spacecraft acts essentially as a small radio relay tower in space for transmissions of all types of communications between one earth section and another, or between many stations at the same time.

The earth stations, capable of sending and receiving all forms of communications via satellite, serve as doorways to this space system.

Comsat manages and operates U.S. earth stations located at Andover, Me.; Etam, W. Va.; Cayey, Puerto Rico; Brewster, Wash.; Jamesburg, Central Cal. and Paumalu, Hawaii. It owns 50 percent of a station at Pulantat, Guam; it owns 100 percent of the Bartlett Earth Station at Talkeetna, Alaska. Stations located abroad are owned and operated by companies or agencies in the countries in which they are located.

Comsat's Role

The Communications Satellite Corporation is a unique American company, the only U.S. satellite carrier. Comsat is chartered by an Act of Congress, the Communications Satellite Act of 1962. It is a private company—not a government agency—which is regulated like any other communications carrier company. Comsat receives its main revenues from leasing satellite circuits to authorized customers. Its principal customers are the established U.S. international carrier companies, such as AT&T, ITT, RCA and Western Union International.

Intelsat

An international partnership—the International Telecommunications Satellite Consortium, or Intelsat—owns the commercial satellites in the system. (The earth stations, however, are owned by individual countries or companies, not by Intelsat). Intelsat was formed in 1964 with the goal of establishing a single global satellite communications system open to all countries without discrimination. By June 1972, it had grown to a membership of 83 countries. Each member nation shares in the cost of the satellites, and in turn receives its share of revenues from the system.

Permanent or definitive arrangements, to replace the interim arrangements that have guided Intelsat since 1964, were negotiated in 1971, and were pending ratification or final approval by a number of countries in 1972.

Under the existing interim arrangements, Comsat is the U.S. representative in Intelsat, and also serves as its manager. As of June 1972, the 83 countries were:

Algeria	Iran	Peru
Argentina	Iraq	Philippines
Australia	Ireland	Portugal

TV Rates Overseas (As of June 1, 1972)

Comsat's rates on file with the FCC cover its charges to other carrier companies for a TV half-channel, that is, for service between a U.S. earth station and a satellite. The rates do not include services added by terrestrial carrier companies in their charges to broadcasters; nor do they include the other half-channel from the satellite to another earth station, or a gateway city abroad.

Comsat rates are the same for monochrome or color. The Comsat half-channel rates below, as of June 1972, include video and Type II (8 kHz) audio:

Atlantic

U.S. mainland or Puerto Rico to Argentina, Brazil, Canary Islands, Chile, Colombia, France, Germany, Greece, Iran, Israel, Italy, Jordan, Malagasy Republic, Morocco, Nigeria, Peru, Senegal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, Venezuela and Zaire—$650 for first 10 minutes, $17 for each additional minute.

U.S. mainland or Puerto Rico to Barbados, Jamaica, Martinique, Trinidad and Tobago, Panama or Mexico—$440 for first 10 minutes, $12.50 for each additional minute.

*U.S. mainland to Puerto Rico—$414 for first 10 minutes, $11.40 for each additional minute.

Pacific

U.S. mainland or Alaska to Australia, China (Rep. of) Guam, Hong Kong, Japan, Korea (Rep. of), New Zealand, Philippines, Thailand and The People's Republic of China—$725 for first 10 minutes, $20.50 for each additional minute.

*U.S. mainland to Hawaii—$440 for first 10 minutes, $12.50 for each additional minute.

*Hawaii to Alaska—same as above Mainland/Hawaii.

*U.S. mainland to Alaska—$414 for first 10 minutes, $11.40 for each additional minute.

Hawaii to Australia, China (Rep. of) Guam, Hong Kong, Japan, Korea (Rep. of), New Zealand, Philippines, Thailand, The People's Republic of China—$650 for first 10 minutes, $17 for each additional minute.

Guam to Australia, China (Rep. of), Hawaii, Hong Kong, Japan, Korea (Rep. of), New Zealand, Philippines and Thailand—$650 for first 10 minutes, $17 for each additional minute.

Comsat will file basic TV rates to other countries, in both the Atlantic and Pacific areas, as new earth stations enter the system, opening new areas to satellite services.

Domestic U.S. Satellite Service

Comsat has proposed a comprehensive program to provide satellite services within the U.S. for domestic communications. It is one of a number of applicants whose proposals were submitted to the FCC.

For the TV industry, Comsat offered to supply a complete nationwide studio-to-studio program distribution service. It would be a part of a multi-user system of high-capacity satellites and associated earth stations and terrestrial facilities capable of providing all forms of communication services. The FCC is expected to issue guidelines or rules by mid-1972.

*Because both space legs and both earth stations are U.S., Comsat can provide a through rate, which is simply double the half-channel rate given here.
